

What's ahead when AI and intellectual property converge

December 27, 2023 | Articles & Books

Davis Polk partner David Lisson and associate Serge Voronov authored “What’s ahead when AI and intellectual property converge” in the Daily Journal. In the article, they discuss intellectual property litigation and legislative developments in AI regulation. They note that as interest in AI intensified this year, so too did intellectual property in the space, with cases asserting copyright and patent infringement as well as trade secret misappropriation.

They also note that although Congress has not yet acted on data privacy or other AI legislation, EU policymakers have announced an agreement on sweeping AI regulations, and it is worth watching for legislative developments in 2024.

Read the full article