

D.C. District Court Orders Production of Internal Compliance Investigation Materials

March 26, 2014 | Client Update

On March 6, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia granted a motion to compel the production of documents arising from defendants' internal compliance investigations.

The court rejected defendants' arguments that these documents qualified for attorney-client privilege or work product protections, relying on the fact that the investigation was required by both government contracting regulations and internal corporate policy.
